Important Differences as to the State of the Concessions.

CANAL COMPARISON

Relative Advantages of Panama and Nicaragua Routes.

COST AND MAINTENANCE

Although the situation with regard to the isthmian canal has been somewhat changed by the offer of the Panama canal property to this government at $40,000,000, the figure BOOKCASE at $1.25 and build up as your library grows. It will be ALWAYS COM-PLETE-and can always be added to. In decided upon by the commission as proper as against the company's original estimate of $109,141,500, the discussion of the relaconstruction it is the most wonderful piece tive merits of the two rival routes of Nicaragua and Panama contained in the report John C. Parker, 619 7th. of the commission is directly pertinent to the pending issues. The commission, after reviewing all of the features of the two routes, and failing to secure a lower estimate from the Panama company than that named, reported in favor of the Nicaragua route. The items of advantage to the Pan-Grafton & Son, 'Roofing Experts," Phone 760. ama line which it found were the shorter route across the isthmus, a more complete The swellest possible Suits, $20. fabrics - the finest Suits, $20. ssible tailoring. In addition, the com-mission found that the situation with refer-Suits, $20. Brown & Co., 1427 Pa. Ave. ence to the concessions and franchises was to the advantage of the Nicaragua project, the way being directly open there for a saisfactory agreement between the United States and the governments involved, while in the case of Panama the course is beset with difficulties

Earthquakes. One of the first points of comparison between the two routes relates to the probability of earthquakes. No very important disturbance of the earth's surface has occurred at either place since 1886. The record for points upon the Nicaragua line shows fourteen earthquakes, while the record for Panama shows twenty-eight earthquakes. This record, however, is incomplete as a whole. The commission says:

"It is evident that this list is not complete enough to justify a comparison be-tween the Nicaragua and Panama routes as to either the number of earthquakes or their severity. They are on precisely the same footing historically as they are geo-graphically. In neither case are there recorded any great disasters such as have occurred in neighboring countries." The commission further points out that in consequence of the peculiar character of earthquakes, most markedly affecting lofty structures, the generally underground works of a canal would not be seriously affected by a disturbance of the crust. It is possible and even probable that the more accurately fitting portions of the canal, such as lock gates, may at times be distorted by earthquakes, that contingency being classed with the accidental collision of ships with the gates, and is to be provided for in the same way, by duplicate gates. It is also possible that a fissure might open that would drain the canal and, if it remained open, might destroy it. But this possibility should not deter the con-struction of the canal any more than the fear of a conflagration would prevent the erection of a great building. Finally, the commission gives the opinion that such danger as exists from earthquakes is essentially the same for both the routes and that n of the canal. As to climate, the Panama has a "lugu brious history from which the Nicaragua route is free." In Nicaragua the trade winds are more regular, tempering the heat and removing miasma more effectively; but on the other hand the rainfall is greater at Nicaragua, at least for the east side, and the resulting humidity is greater. Among the white employes of the commission sent to Nicaragua there were fewer cases of sickness than there would probably have been among the same number in some parts United States, while among those sent to Panama the proportions of sick was greater. On the Nicaraguan line during the operations of the Maritime Canal Co. the health of the force was reported to be good. These operations, however," the commission says, "were of a preliminary character, employing but a limited number of men. It is probable that when ten or twenty thousand men are assembled and the rank soil is being turned up over a widely de-veloped line of works, the experience will be different.'

Rights and Franchises.

Taking up the question of rights and franchises, the commission traces first the history of the Nicaragua project, showing that there is today no existing grant to a private corporation by either Nicaragua or Costa Rica, all concessions having been forfeited by failure to comply with the conditions. The Maritime Canal Company, the original holder of the concession, failed finally in October, 1899, Nicaragua entering into possession in perpetuity of all the property of the company within the territory of that republic without paying any indemnity. Before this time, however, anticipating the fallure of the Maritime Company, Nicaragua entered into a promise of contract, later made definite, with Edward Eyre and Edward F. Cragin, who organized the Interoceanic Canal Company, obligated to commence excavation within two years and to complete the work in ten years. Two payments in gold by the company were provided for, respectively of $100,000 and $400,000. The second payment fell due August 9, 1900, but the company falled to meet its obligations and to obtain an extension of time, and the contract was declared annulled.

Costa Rica's Position. Costa Rica is necessarily a party to any project or international agreement for the construction of the canal along this route, inasmuch as its boundary line follows some portion of the natural water course, and at one point of the projected route the canal falls exclusively within Costa Rican territory. The history of the negotiations between the commercial companies and Costa Rica is virtually the same as that between Nicaragua and Costa Rica.

The time for the completion of the canal under the last existing contract between Costa Rica and a commercial company ex-pired in February, 1901, and has not been-extended and the contract of the canal company with Nicaragua having been for-feited by that government, "there are now in force no obligations of either republic with any government, corporation or individual to prevent either of them from entering into an agreement with the United States that would authorize our government to construct, control and manage a maritime canal along this route and exercise all the privileges of ownership over it, provided the negotiations and actions proceed upon the lines indicated by the treaty relations by which the different governments are bound. Sentiment as to Government Ownership. "The contracts made by Nicaragua and Costa Rica giving special privileges to individuals, associations or companies for the use of their territory and navigable waters for the construction of a canal or for other purposes contain no authority to transfer these rights to foreign governments, and in most of them such transfer is absolutely prohibited. This indicates that each of these governments at one time was un-willing to have its territory occupied by became thoroughly impressed with the new food and began to improve at once. Little by little my strength came back and slowly and surely I gained my lost weight. The wasted tissues and muscles built up, and today I am well, buoyant and strong.

"I unreservedly give the chief credit to Grape-Nats, which met me in a crisis and brought account the dark period of despondency. Nothing else did it for nothing else could be ensured.

"Please withhold my name." Name can be given upon application to the Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

willing to have its territory occupied by another nationality even for the purpose of promoting the commercial and industrial development of the state.

"The commission has reason, however, to believe that this feeling does not now exist. The sentiment in both countries is strongly in favor of opening a navigable failure of every private effort to construct such work has brought thinking men to the conclusion that it can only be successfully accomplished with the larger re-

Alleged Bad State of Sidewalk. C. A. Harbaugh, secretary of the Brookland Citizens' Association, has written to the District Commissioners calling their attention to the muddy condition of the sidewalk on 12th street, Brookland, at several points. Morris Hacker, the superintendent of roads, says the mud is unavoidable after a rain until such time as Detroit street is graded and the banks north and south of it on 12th street are graded and sodded. The wash between Lansing and Providence streets is entirely from private property, Mr. Hacker says. He also calls attention to the fact that there is a police regulation requiring the removal of dirt on sidewalks, but a reasonable time is given lot owners in which to comply with the notification. He says the county force has not waited for this, but has already cleaned the walk. The paper will be referred to the police depart-
